In a world where young voices are often overlooked or marginalized, Kids Take the Stage is a beacon of hope, offering a platform for children and teens to express themselves, develop their creativity, and gain valuable life skills through the power of storytelling.

Founded in 2010 by a group of dedicated educators and community leaders, Kids Take the Stage has grown into a national organization with chapters in over 20 cities. The program provides a safe and supportive environment where young people can explore their imaginations, build their confidence, and discover their unique talents.

The Power of Storytelling

Storytelling is an essential part of human communication. It allows us to share our experiences, connect with others, and make sense of the world around us. For children and teens, storytelling can be a particularly powerful tool for self-expression and development.

Through Kids Take the Stage, young people learn the art of storytelling in a fun and engaging way. They participate in workshops where they develop their writing, public speaking, and performance skills. They also have the opportunity to perform their stories at local events and festivals, gaining valuable experience and building their confidence.

The benefits of storytelling for young people are numerous. Storytelling helps children and teens to:

- Develop their imagination and creativity

- Build their confidence and self-esteem
- Improve their communication and public speaking skills
- Learn empathy and compassion
- Develop their critical thinking and problem-solving skills

Empowering Young Voices

Kids Take the Stage is more than just a storytelling program. It is a community of young people who are empowered to express themselves and make a difference in their world.

Through their workshops, performances, and mentorship opportunities, Kids Take the Stage provides young people with the skills and confidence they need to succeed in school, in their careers, and in life.

Kids Take the Stage believes that all young people have a story to tell. And with the help of this program, they are finding their voices and using them to make the world a better place.
