First Aid and Medical Treatment

The first aid and medical treatment section of the Army Survival Guide covers everything from basic first aid to more advanced medical procedures. It includes information on how to treat wounds, injuries, and illnesses, as well as how to perform CPR and other lifesaving techniques.

Basic First Aid

Basic first aid includes treating minor cuts, scrapes, and bruises. It also includes treating sprains, strains, and other common injuries. Basic first aid can be performed by anyone with basic medical knowledge.

Advanced Medical Procedures

Advanced medical procedures include treating serious wounds, injuries, and illnesses. These procedures require more specialized medical knowledge and skills. They should only be performed by trained medical personnel.

CPR and Other Lifesaving Techniques

CPR and other lifesaving techniques are used to save the life of someone who is not breathing or who has no pulse. These techniques should only be performed by trained medical personnel.

Wilderness Survival

The wilderness survival section of the Army Survival Guide covers how to survive in the wilderness, including how to find food, water, and shelter. It also includes information on how to build a fire, use a map and compass, and navigate in the wilderness.

Finding Food and Water

Finding food and water is essential for survival in the wilderness. There are many different ways to find food and water, including hunting, fishing, foraging, and collecting rainwater.

Building a Fire

Building a fire is essential for warmth, cooking food, and signaling for help. There are many different ways to build a fire, depending on the materials available.

Using a Map and Compass

Using a map and compass is essential for navigating in the wilderness. A map shows the location of landmarks, roads, and other features. A compass shows the direction of north, which can help you stay on course.

Navigating in the Wilderness

Navigating in the wilderness can be challenging, but there are a few basic techniques that can help. These techniques include following landmarks, using a map and compass, and using the sun and stars to find your way.

Combat Skills

The combat skills section of the Army Survival Guide covers a variety of combat skills, including how to use a weapon, how to defend yourself, and how to fight in different environments. It also includes information on how to read a map and compass, and how to navigate in the wilderness.

Using a Weapon

Using a weapon is essential for self-defense and for hunting. There are many different types of weapons, each with its own strengths and weaknesses.

Defending Yourself

Defending yourself is an important part of combat survival. There are many different ways to defend yourself, including using a weapon, using hand-to-hand combat techniques, and using evasive maneuvers.

Fighting in Different Environments

Fighting in different environments requires different combat skills. For example, fighting in the forest is different from fighting in the desert. The Army Survival Guide provides information on how to fight in different environments.

Reading a Map and Compass

Reading a map and compass is essential for navigating in the wilderness. A map shows the location of landmarks, roads, and other features. A compass shows the direction of north, which can help you stay on course.
